

Principles of Responsive, Collaborative Leadership for the CCSU Educational Leadership Team

Adopted by the ELT Sept. 17, 2008

- The nature of our communication with others is as important as what we communicate.
- Significant growth in leadership potential as an individual often occurs through systemic, organizational interaction with other leaders.
- Leadership teams benefit when a common set of 21st century skills and practices are acquired by each member in order to be responsive and collaborative decision makers as a whole.
- Recognizing our individual aptitudes as leaders can create opportunities for building a well-rounded, cohesive leadership framework within our ELT.
- Knowing our schools, our roles, and our responsibilities as part of a preK-12/Tech. continuum, ensures we can make well informed, student-centered decisions as an ELT.
- Embracing the CCSU Mission and Vision statements serves as the basis of our individual and collective leadership work.
